

THE ANGLO-GERMAN FAMILY HISTORY SOCIETY

The Anglo-German Family History Society was founded in 1987 to help people research their German ancestry in the UK and on the Continent.

We produce many booklets and research guides. These cover lots of topics including German institutions in the UK, occupations like sugar-bakers and pork-butchers, and alien internment during WW1. They also explain how to go about finding records, as well as providing draft letters in German. We have indexes that hold information on more than 500,000 German people who lived and worked in Britain, compiled from many sources including the registers of German churches and ship landing records.

The society holds meetings every other month on a Saturday. They are held at a venue in central London and members can also watch live via Zoom. The February and August meetings are Zoom-only. The meetups feature talks by guest speakers and cover a wide range of subjects, either connected directly to German research or family history in general.

We produce an English-language magazine called the Mitteilungsblatt - or 'Blatt for short. It means "Newsletter." It contains "how I did it" articles as well as details of new research sources and much more.

A subscription to the society entitles members to attend its meetings, receive three 'Blatts a year and have their interests and comments published in the 'Blatt and, if desired, on the society's website too.

For details of how to join the society visit <https://www.agfhs.com/about-us/join-the-society> or just search online for "Anglo-German Family History."
